The Horrible Experience of a Kentucky Editor.

THOUSANDS ATTACKED HIM

They Swarmed on His Back and Shoulders Like Bees-Dashed Against His Face or Clung Screeching to His Hair or Beard. How He Escaped.

Lancaster, Ky., April 10. - Louis Landram, editor of the Central Record, while hunting on Burdett's Knobs, seven miles north of Lancaster, recently walked up a deep guich in search of shelter from a heavy rain. He had proceeded only a short distance, when he noticed at the foot of the cliff a wide crevasse, partly hidden by vines and shrubbery. Approaching and entering this, ac was gradually surprised on discovering it to be the outlet of a cavern. The entrance was winding and narrow, and on either side were steep and craggy walls. The roof ascended at a sharp angle into obscurity.

Some thirty feet from the entrance, lying obliquely on a high projecting ledge, there was a monster block of granite, oblong in general outline and weighing hundreds of tons, its huge crest upreared into the cave's gloomy dome. Landram regarded this ponderous rock in wonder. It had undoubtedly been dislodged from above by a seismic shock, and had it fallen into the corridor, instead of on the ledge, it would have choked it completely.

More than half of its weight seemed now suspended over the passage. A slight shock or the pressure of a finger would apparently have caused it to plunge into the chasm. It was, indeed, one of the death traps of nature, grim and sinister, sometimes seen in subterranean chambers or upon preci pices. Beyond it there were evidences of a large chamber.

The excitement found in penetrating the unexplored-something which always exerts a fascinating influence upon dar-ing spirits-allured the hunter. He advanced boldly towards the interior, but when two fiery eyeballs were suddenly turned upon him from a dark corner be came to an immediate halt. At the same instant his dog, which had followed at his heels, uttered a dismal howl and made speedy exit from the cavern. Landram threw up his gon and discharged both barrels simultaneously, but he never knew what the animal was, or what became of it for the infernal din that bellowed through the cavern was instantly followed by awful crash, dense volumes of dust and sudden darkness, and he was thrown violently forward on his face and aimost buried beneath masses of falling sand For a moment he was considerably and scrambled to his feet. Then a cold horror fell upon him, for he saw that the great rook, shaken from its moor-ings by the explosion, had plunged into the passage behind him. Its lowering and colossal form, together with great quanties of earth and fragments of stone, was wedged tightly in the corridor, constituting a mighty barrier that arose black and frightful between htmself and liberty. He saw no way of escape. No ray of light pierced the gloom. Moreover, a vast army of bats, disturbed by the detonation and shifting sand, began to swarm thickly in the passage. They were of remarkable size and fierceness. These creatures began to alight on his person, and he was forced to beat them off with a swift and vigorous movement of his arms. They swept forward in flocks as if to escape. and that quarter of the cave was alive

They swarmed on Landram's back and shared to the extent of $500,000; and he shoulders like bees. They dashed against won. This is not a new story now, but only his face or clung screeching to his bair a few days ago Mr. White cleared up or beard. This multitude of busy wings $60,000 on another bid of the same nature, stirred and whirled about in suffocating on Brooklyn bonds billows the dry, penetrating dust of cen-turies.

Mr. White is thirty-two years old, and a Texan by birth. He has been specu-impetuosity, each moment hurling hundreds of the squeaking creatures upon the earth and trampling them under foot. He married a Boston girl, and since that was without resource or shelter in the has made more money than he ever midst of a species of horrible tempest. That a man could preserve his pres ence of mind in a situation of this sort is wonderful, but that Landram did see is shown by a plan which occurred to him and which he immediately proceeded to execute. Shaking himself free of his termenters for a moment, he deffed his hunting coat and poured over it the stimulant and combustive contents of a quart bottle that he drew from his hip pocket. He ignited it with a match, and as the flames leaped fiercely up he began to whiri it, a circle of roaring flame and smoke above his head.

The effect was magical. The flame and oungent fumes were intolerable, and every but that could use his wings began a precipitate flight to other quarters. And in that spectral light the number was for the moment transformed into semething inhuman, demoniacal. The cavern rang with his horrible outcries. The ound of bursting shells came from the pockets of his burning coat.

Rushing from side to side of the cave, his hair tumbied over his forehead in tangled masses, and his face distorted, he whirled the blazing torch hither and thither, scorching great numbers of the creatures and burning many alive, anti the horrid host had been driven back into the recesses of the cavern. Thus by a drastic method did be quickly rid himself of the smiting plague.

nmediately began to consider the possibilities of escape from his captivity. If any avenue of escape over the lofty summit of the boulder still existed, which was doubtful, it would have been madness to try to reach it in the reigning darkness, either by attempting to scale the barrier itself, or by clambering up the steepand Jagged walls of the cavern. It remained to be seen, therefore, whether there was any vulnerable point about the opposing mass. By the light of an uncertain blaze, that still played over a remnant of his burning coat, he picked up his gun and plunged the bar of the giant rock. The debris yielded little by little to his attack. With the energy of a man entombed alive, and desperate with desire for liberty, he dug out quantities of earth and pried up fragments of stone. again kindled in his bosom, and at the expiration of about seven hours, during which prodigious labors were performed, he succeeded in making an opening aroun the barrier large enough to admit his body.

Through this hole he at last squeezed and twisted barrels of a gun, and just as the moon arose behind the timber of the Wall Street Yesterday.

New York, April 10.—The stock market has been irregular this week. Sugar refining, the Gas stocks and Western Union have advanced while the railway list, particularly the shares of the anthracite coal carrying roads, is in the main lower than it was last Saturday. The decline in railway stocks is the more significantbecause of the extensive covering of shorts, caused by the sharp advance in a number of the so-called industrial shares. Speculative conditions have been unusually prominent in shaping the course of prices on the exchange this week. Stocks have advanced whenever there has been a demand for them to close short contracts, and following the cessation of a demand for them from that quarter they have, as a rule, declined. The limited character of the dealings is shown by the fact that transac-tions in stocks have averaged less than $150,000 a day, and those in bonds less than $1,000,000, par value, per day.

The market today was influenced largely by foreign advices indicative of a collis ion bet ween Turkey and Greece. European markets were unsettled and the appre-hension aroused there was reflected here. The majority of the list sustained frac-tional net losses. The weekly statement of averages of the associated banks shows the heavy withdrawals of lawful money last week to pay duties. It is interesting to note that those payments have been made without increasing the loans. From a stock exchange point of view, the most important occurrences this week have been the collapse of several discretionary blind pool concerns. The exposure of the character of these concerns is likely to precipitate the collapse of those that remain, for those who have any money to their credit in any one of them are likely to withdraw it, or attempt to do so, before the demands of their fellow victims make it impossible to do so.

Of Mr. Abraham White, new etock

Mr. White is of the opinion that a man doesn't need any special experience to succeed in Wall street. What he does think necessary is pluck, talent, genius. If Confused and only partially aroused from the torper of hibernation, thousands precipitated themselves against the rocks and fell to the floor, where they continued to move awkwardly about. They collected in sections heeps on every rock and ledge: the air was noisy with swishing when the formula of the floor and the section of the floor of th a few days ago Mr. White cleared up

Threatened with suffocation, beincreased lating for fully half his life, and operated the activity of his movements to a fierce innectosity, each moment hurling hunthe veterans. About ten years ago he has made more money than he ever did before. Mrs. White has made for herself $40,000 by various investments, since their lucky bond deal, though she does not make any pretensions to operating on the scale that her husband does.

Mr White is a plunger, and he would than to take a sure thing with small profits. That is why he is a millionaire today; and that is why he is a stock broker, and more than all that-for other men are millionaires and stock brokersthat is how he got a loan of half a million dollars in gold from Russell Sage. Most nen would rather undertake to pry open the jaws of the Sphinx than to loosen the purse strings of Mr. Sage. But White ac mplished it by sheer audacity and brains and suavity

That is all, except that he runs no blind pools in this new business of his on F street where Willard & Co. used to be. He gives you advice if you want it, and he deals in stocks or bonds for you. There is no bucketing in his deal. I like him because I like his qualities. He shall have his share of my trade.

Everybody on the street is watching the fine spurt of Chicago Gas. It had a pretty fair drop after the Trans-Missouri decision. but has now picked up all it lost and more Deacon White, the other Washington gentleman who has made almost as phene a success in the stock market as Abraham The exertion had fatigued him. His white, is my authority on Chicago Gas. face streamed with perspiration. Yet he has made $40,000 in the stock since he began his operations last spring. These are White's arguments: Chicago Gas is paying 6 per cent dividends. It is now in the eighties. It is every bit as good a stock as New York Gas, which is around 150, and is only paying 8 per cent. There are large bank dividends in Chleago Gas, held up on account of the legal troubles of the company, which have been carned and are in the treasury. The legal affairs are about straightened out. Consolidation will almost surely come without much further friction. Chicago is spread out over many miles and no competition need be feared rels into the earth and sand at one side from outsiders, because of the immense amount that would be required for new mains for any other company. All this sounds pretty plain and rather enticing. White says there is no reason in the world why gas should not go to 90, and he expects it in very short order.

The earnings of New York Central for the month of March were $3,800,000 The year before in March they were $3,-600,000, an increase of $200,000. North ern Pacific's earnings for the fourth week In his hand he held the battered of March were $533,000, an increase of sted barrels of a gue, and just as $82,000. For the month of March they were $2,350,000, an increase of $16,600. Eunday, 1 to 5 p. m. opposite cliff, he passed out haggard and For the year to date the earnings of Northern Pacific have been $14,300,000, which shows a decrease of $1,600,000. All the statements for the latter part of the year in Northern Pacific have been most favorable, the decrease being all made in the first month.

The earnings of St. Paul for the first week in April were $494,000, showing a decrease of $54,000. From Jufy 1 St. Paul's earnings have been $23,700,000, a decrease of $2,300,000

It is removed that the new passenge agreement between the Western roads will be much stronger than the old one, though it is not stated how this will be done, avoiding the Trans-Missouri decision or if it has been thought necessary to avoid the decision.

Sugar still fluctuates with no particular tendency, rather a weakness than a strength, however. It seems probable that Sugar is going lower, though a great many people think to the contrary.

There is a strong tip out on Omaha again. Considerable buying is being done

Mr. Silsby's cotton correspondents. Rob-ert Lindblom & Co., and Munn & Co., say of Cotton. The late months are down on free selling by the fertilizer people and farmers. We recommend sales on any advance, as money will be made on them inside of sixty days should the weather clear South. The Government report makes this year's crop 8,534,807.

There is a feeling out that Tobacco is to go lower. Various gossip is about, some of it, probably, founded on fact, that tobacco is the least strong of the One of the stories just at present is that the Wholesale Growers' Association of Iowa voted unanimously not to handle the goods of the American Tobacco Con pany because of the rescinding of the factors' agreement.

Ex. Div. Chicago, April 10.-The bears have had a very profitable week in wheat and coarse grains, although more so by far in the former, prices having declined 6 cents per bushel from last Saturday's close. same depression has existed abroad, Liver pool showing even more decline than Chi cage. The case with which prices have declined and the apparent lack of confidence among holders have undoubtedly encouraged the bears to sell at an extreme ly dangerous price. It is believed the decline will develop a very large domestic and foreign cash demand, which in turn will further diminish our present depleted stocks and again cause high prices. Even if the growing winter crop should prove large, it will not be available until August; in the meantime elevators and mills in the interior are very scantily supplied; the amount of contract wheat in Chicago is astonish ingly small, and indications point to a liberal movement out of Minneapolis and Du buth at the opening of navigation. It is thought that the market will not decline below the low point fouched yesterday again on the present crop.

Prices were much firmer today, caused by a drop in consols of 1-4c, an advance in Liverpool of 1-4d and continued light Argentine shipments. The higher cables and the drop in consols are supposed to be the result of more serious complications between Greece and Turkey. Shorts have been good buyers, but from all appear-ances some of the larger bears have been sellers and may have to cover their contracts at higher prices. Liquidation was the principal cause for the depression in coarse grains.

Today's closing prices: Wheat-May, 66; July, 65 3-8; September, 64 3-8. Corn-May, 23 1-2; July, 24 7-8; September, 26 3-8. Oats-May, 16 3-8; July, 17 1-2; September, 18 3-8. Lard-May, $4.20;

Candid Mr. Cannon. "Why," says Uncle Joe Cannon to a man who complimented him on his latest tariff speech, "you surprise me. If you had been here two years ago you we have heard me make the same speech, and if you had been here four years, six years or eight years ago you would also have heard me make exactly the same speech, and the Lord only knows how many menused that speech before I did. '-Boston Herald.

The New Coachman. This is the sort of an interview which any be expected when motor carriages come into use:

"You advertised for a coachman, sir?" said the applicant. "I did," replied the merchant. "Do you want the place?"

"Yes. sir." "Have you had any experience?" "I have been in the business all my life." "You are used to handling gasoline, then?"

"Yes, sir." "And you are well up in electricity?" "Thoroughly."
"Good! Of course, you are a machinist,

"Certainly." "Then I presume you have an engineer's "Of course."

Very well. You may go around to the outhouse and get the motorcycle ready My wife tells me she wishes to do a little Morning and Sunday Times, 35 cents shopping."—Toledo Blade.
